

Assistant Professor
Department of Labor Relations, Law, and History
ILR School at Cornell University

The ILR School at Cornell University invites applications for a tenure-track faculty position at the Assistant Professor level in the Department of Labor Relations, Law, and History to begin August 2010. Applications are encouraged from Ph.D. candidates who will be completing their degrees prior to this date, as well as those who have completed their doctorates during the previous three years. Applicants should have research and teaching interests related to Labor Relations broadly defined, a Ph.D. in a relevant social science or professional discipline, and very strong research and teaching potential. Preference will be given to candidates willing and able to teach the department's introductory level course on contemporary U.S. collective bargaining.

The ILR School is the world's leading college focused on work, employment, and labor issues. Information about the ILR School is available at www.ilr.cornell.edu. Faculty in its Department of Labor Relations, Law, and History (formerly Collective Bargaining, Labor Law, and Labor History) include leading scholars from a number of disciplinary backgrounds who study a broad range of issues related to labor and employment. Information about the department is available at www.ilr.cornell.edu/academics/cb.html.

Applications from women and minority candidates are strongly encouraged.

Interested candidates should submit a cover letter describing their research and teaching interests, a vita, writing samples, and three reference letters to:
